

Speaker 1: There's a delightful quote from an English traveler, Peter Munday, from 1640 that sums up the Dutch attitude towards art and I quote, "All, in general, strive to adorn their houses, especially the outer or street room with costly pieces. Butcher and baker is not much inferior in their shops and which are fairly set forth, yea many times. Blacksmiths, cobblers, et cetera, have some picture or other by their forge and their stall."
