

Speaker 1: Most American school children are taught about the Antislavery Movement in the United States, but you have to realize the only 5% of the slave trade from West Africa went to the United States, the rest went to the Caribbean Islands and South America. Even today, you have populations like the US Virgin Islands where 95% of the population are descended from slaves.

The Antislavery Movement formed in Europe and America during the 1800s, which led to the liberation of slaves of African descent throughout the Western Hemisphere. This had numerous consequences and only some of those were economic.

[00:00:44] [END OF AUDIO]