

Speaker 1: Fellow philosophers, Simone de Beauvoir, added a feminist component to existentialism. Recognizing that men and women are biologically different, Beauvoir felt that it is how society views gender differences that truly differentiates between men and women. She proposed that women should break the patterns of the past and be viewed as individuals rather than in relationship to their husbands or their families.

[00:00:28] [END OF AUDIO]