

Speaker: In Germany, Adolf Hitler took up the fascist approach. Germany was suffering greatly. Its economic crisis affected every corner of the population, creating fertile ground for change and someone to blame. In 1921, Hitler created the Nazi party, and then in 1934, he became the president and chancellor of Germany. Hitler was genuinely convinced that the Bolsheviks were responsible for Germany's terrible economy. Additionally, he targeted the Jewish population as representative of the problems that plague Germany.

Hitler created an ideal of a new Germany, that was born of a superior race and an Aryan nation. Because this Aryan nation would need room to grow, that became justification for geographic expansion and the acquisition of new territories for Germany.

[00:00:54] [END OF AUDIO]