

Speaker: During Hitler's rule, prior to World War I, the Bauhaus was closed. Most of the teachers and artists fled to America including Walter Gropius who took up the chairmanship of the School of Architecture and Design at Harvard University. Painter Josef Albers took a position at the Black Mountain College in North Carolina. He influenced students such as Jacob Lawrence and just as a note, you will hear more about the Black Mountain College in the next portion of the modern era.

[00:00:28] [END OF AUDIO]