

Speaker: Out of the data movement, a new movement emerged called surrealism. Just like data, the surrealist challenge tradition, rather than operating on pure chance, surrealists took up the world of the unconscious. A group of surrealists were automatists like John Monroe who would just let the unconscious mind flow onto the paper without a plan. The second group and much more well-known group focused on representing the world of dreams. This created art that depicted impossible landscapes with odd juxtapositions and surprising income goodies.

Salvador Dali, Max Ernst different name are great are artists that every college student should be familiar with. Surrealism was not limited to just painting. Meret Oppenheim was a well-known sculptor who combined ordinary objects and strange settings. Her most famous sculpture is a teacup and spoon and saucer that is made of Gazelle fur called Luncheon Infer. Man Ray was a photographer who was also surrealist, and is known for his fantastic altered images in photography, including surrealistic photographs of Salvador Dali.

[00:01:17] [END OF AUDIO]